MOSAIC SIGNAL DESIGN GUIDE

Mosaic Certification · Facts current as of 2026-10-24 · The principle: people tell a real story, then interpret their own story. They never rate the organization.

1 Pick a framework

- How work really feels: individual vs. team vs. organization, formality → Organizational Culture Probe
- What customers experience, from first contact to follow-up → Customer Experience Journey
- Whether people are willing, able and ready for a change → Change Readiness Assessment
- Quick stories at an event, workshop or site visit → Quick Narrative Capture
- Something none of these fit (experienced designers) → Blank survey

2 Write the story prompt

- One concrete experience, not an opinion.
- A specific moment and time window: "a recent time when…"
- Neutral, so good, bad and mixed stories all fit.
- About what happened, not who.
- Word limits people will actually meet.

3 Write the questions about the story

- Triad: Three things that compete for a limited resource. All three reasonable; no "right" corner.
- Dyad: Both ends are places a real person would choose. Where the middle sits is the finding.
- Stones: Three to five items, maximum. Label both ends of both axes.
- Context: One or two simple questions (e.g. tenure, site) so you can compare groups.

4 Before launch

- [ ] Preview on a phone, and take it yourself end to end.
- [ ] Respondent band fits the audience. The survey closes to new answers at the cap.
- [ ] Launch date booked within two months of purchase.
- [ ] Client knows there's no scored report and no benchmark.
- [ ] Distribution plan: link, QR code at huddles, or email.

5 Reading results

1. Shape before average: concentrations, gaps, splits.
2. Name what's surprising.
3. Read the stories in that area before naming it.
4. Say the pattern in respondents' terms, as a hypothesis to discuss, not a verdict.

Avoid: quoting a mean without its distribution; calling visual concentrations "computed clusters"; trying to work out who wrote a story.
