Talk track: the boss-attribution conversation

(use before every launch)

With the leader (2 minutes)

"Before we send anything, one thing about how your report works. Your peers, direct reports and others are always grouped, and a group only appears if at least three people respond. Your boss is different. Their ratings and comments appear in your report under their name, as 'Boss 1'. If you have two bosses, both are named.

Two consequences:

- First, at most two bosses are named. If you report to more than two, you choose which two; the portal shows who is "Named in your report" and who is "Counted with Others", and anyone counted with Others is anonymous, like your peers.
- Second, I'll make sure your boss knows their feedback is attributed before they answer.

Any questions about that?"

With each boss (1 minute, before invitations go out)

"You'll be invited to give feedback for [Leader] as their boss. I want to be clear about one thing: in the Leadership Mosaic, boss feedback isn't anonymous. Your ratings and comments appear in [Leader]'s report under your name. Feedback from everyone else is grouped and anonymous. Please answer as candidly as you would in a one-to-one development conversation."

If someone asks why bosses are named

"[Leader] already knows who they report to, so pooling one or two bosses wouldn't hide anything. It would just make the feedback harder to use. Naming it keeps it useful and honest."

If a boss would rather be anonymous

"That's a fair concern. You can still give feedback honestly and constructively. If you'd prefer not to take part as boss, tell me, and we'll discuss it with [Leader]. What we can't do is list you as a peer to make you anonymous, because that would distort the peer view."

Consistent with the product

This talk track matches what bosses read in their invitation, on the consent screen and in the privacy notice: "your name appears next to your feedback in their report."
